The football factory movie cast

The 1992 film, Boomerang, is an obscene rom-com led by Hollywood OG Eddie Murphy. The film, which was a commercial success, featured a deep bench of talent. Here's a look at how much personal wealth the film's stars have accumulated since then. Eddie Murphy And Robin Givens In 'Boomerang' | Paramount Pictures/Getty Images 'Boomerang' flips the script on the romantic comedy Boomerang revolving around a professional and womanizer ad called Marcus. When a female executive named Jaqueline rushes in and gets the job that Marcus believes he deserves, she also steals his heart and then breaks it. While licking his wounds, Marcus hanged himself with his best friends Tyler and Gerard, and his creative colleagues Angela, Bony T, and Strangé. The film attracted laughter and raked in more than $131 million, according to Box Office Mojo. Based on the success of the film, it's no surprise that the actors have received the next high-end roles. Here's how the stars stack up today when it comes to wealth, according to Celebrity Net Worth. Eddie Murphy as 'Marcus' RELATED: 'Beverly Hills Cop': How much are the stars worth today? From comedy shows to occupying the spotlight on the big screen, Saturday Night Live alum Murphy has worked hard and built a huge fortune. The star has an estimated value of $200 million. And with many projects he has on the horizon, Murphy has the potential to earn more. Next, fans can catch Murphy in Coming 2 America, the follow-up to his 1988 smash hit, Coming to America. Martin Lawrence as 'Tyler' RELATED: What's the Cast of 'Martin' Worth Today? Like Murphy, Martin Lawrence became famous as a popular comedian. He starred in the hilarious sitcom Martin and went on to become a successful movie star. His latest feature, Bad Boys for Life, raked in more than $400 million, according to Box Office Mojo. And he was associated with filming a follow-up with his team-star Will Smith. Lawrence has built a property estimated at $110 million. Halle Berry as Oscar winner 'Angela' Halle Berry was a relative new person when she won the hearts of fans in Boomerang. Since then, she has become a superstar with a series of hits under her belt. Movie lovers can recognize Berry from Monster's Ball, Swordfish and the X-Men series. With some memorable performances in his backstage screenings, Berry has built an impressive level of estimated wealth totaling $90 million. Chris Rock as 'Bony T' RELATED: 'Fargo' Star Chris Rock calls the best role of his career - This is why joining his fellow standup comedian in Boomerang, Chris Rock adds heart and humor to the film as letter office worker and gossip. Over the years, Rock has built a reputation as a socially conscious entertainer with remarkable intelligence. He is a film star, director, producer and writer, who has made a tremendous impact in the field of art and entertainment. Rock has made a dramatic turn in his latest project, Fargo, FX's crime drama series and will soon grace the big screen in the latest horror movie in the Saw franchise. Rock's net worth is estimated at about $60 million. Grace Jones as Strangé Model, actor, singer, and electric character Grace Jones delivers a showtopping performance in Boomerang. Known for strong characters such as Zula in Conan the Destroyer and May Day in A View to a Kill, Jones has maintained a presence in Hollywood since the early 1970s. The thieves at the scene were valued at an estimated $7 million. David Alan Grier as 'Gerard' RELATED: 'In Living Color' Alums Jamie Foxx and David Alan Grier Are Reuniting for a New Project TV buffs recognize actor and comedian David Alan Grier for his success in long-running small-screen roles. He became a sketch comedy icon on FOX's In Living Color and vaulted to successful sitcoms in life with Bonnie and The Carmichael Show. Next, the funnyman will star in Dad Stop Embarrassing Me alongside living color alum colleague Jamie Foxx. Grier maintains an estimated $4 million in assets. Robin Givens as 'Jacqueline' Robin Givens became famous as a TV star in the 1980s. After a series of cameo roles, she starred in Head of the Class for five seasons. She went on to appear on the big and small screen, including a very juicy portion like former mayor Sierra McCoy on CW's Riverdale. Tisha Campbell-Martin as 'Yvonne' Tisha Campbell | Time Life Pictures/DMI/The LIFE Picture Collection via Getty Images RELATED: 'House Party' 30 Years Later: How Much Is the Cast Worth Today? Tisha Campbell-Martin made a brief but memorable appearance in Boomerang as Marcus's neighbor and jilted lover, Yvonne. Fans will recognize Campbell-Martin as an actor, singer and dancer who has appeared in Little Shop of Horrors, House Party, Martin, My Wife and Kids, and other popular titles. She is estimated to be worth $500,000. Follow Erika Delgado on Twitter. Photo: United Artists Western genre helped propel many great actors into superstars as they wore hats and boots, then rode horses toward the sunset, until their directors shouted Cut! Do you remember the celebrities? Since the Western film genre was as old as Hollywood made the film itself, many Silent Film Era actors appeared in the West at the time. Film historians identified William S. Hart as the first Western film hero to describe what we know about the typical protagonists of Western films: a man who fights with integrity when necessary, and is honored in his intentions and actions. His 1925 silent film called Tumbleweeds began it all, and paves the way for future Western film heroes to develop and evolve from this character prototype. As the Western film genre flourished, so did the diversity of Western film heroes. Concept Heroes have become, with outlaws becoming protagonists of Western films. They may not have the honor and integrity of typical Western heroes, but these figures have given Western characters a more nuanced Now they appear more human, and less of a perfect hero. In the process, they also become relevant to the audience. To date, the West as a category is still being revised and reformed. But the big stars still want to star in them because they see it as a good opportunity to contribute to the Western genre. Copyright © 2021 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 NFL regular season ended, the college bowl was played, and the bean dip is just about gone. If you are anything like us, this time of year is a bit depressing. Sure, we still have a full slate of playoff games leading up to the Super Bowl, but then what? The excitement of the big games quickly led to a lot of free football last week which left us feeling empty and in need of some gridiron escape. That's when we switched to great football movies. We spent more than 2 weeks watching every football movie ever made so we could rank the best and worst. (Tough work, we know.) numbers are better than others, and a few are about as real as Madden '92 on Sega Genesis, but all of them will do the trick in the cold days of February when you just need a quick fix of pigskin peace of mind. 32. Program (1993) The program has the worst of any movie, or athletes for that matter, there may be: potential. ability. Is Caan the coach in a gritty look at the high-stakes world of college football? We'd love to see that movie. Unfortunately, all we get is this cliché-filled after-school special that features the toughest quarterback to root for in the history of the series. Joe Kane, the least convincing alcoholic we've ever seen, is annoying for two hours. Football logic is also laughably bad: The team loses a series of games and still has a chance at a big bowl? The QB who spent 4 weeks in rehabilitation still a Heisman candidate? But the film has a few things going for it: an attempt at a realistic depiction of steroid abuse, and a young Halle Berry as a brainy coed. (When in doubt, just choose Halle Berry.) But overall, the Program is the ultimate goal-line fumble. 31. Semi-Tough (1977)Burt Reynolds and Kris Kristofferson play Billy Clyde Puckett and Shake Tiller, professional players on the Miami Bucks. They are also room mates who find themselves in a love triangle with the team's owner's daughter, played by 70s babe Jill Clayburgh. This adaptability of a great Dan Jenkins book should have been a winner, but instead it uses too much of its energy to satirize the self-help craze of the 70s. The big game isn't even the center of one of this room going to a wedding. Semi-Tough is definitely a movie of its crazy era, but it's still great to see former university baller Reynolds back on the field. 30. The Best of Times (1986)Robin Williams tries to rew by rewriting the big game from his high school days in which he skipped the winning game and set the course for the rest of his (and his town's) miserable life. Kurt Russell plays the former star quarterback who would rather live with his legacy than try to rekindle his glory days. The football logic in the big game is pretty ridiculous, and the pig skin plays are the worst, but there's something about getting a second chance at that one big failure in your life that still makes The Best of Times a winner. 29. The Freshman (1925)The Freshman may be the original football flick, but in the end, it's just your average boy-try-to-get-the-girl silent movie. Most of Speedy's (Harold Lloyd) moves are unsuccessful, so he decides to join the football team to win. Even though he's just a water guy, he thinks he's part of the real team. On the day of the big game, the coach lost so many players to injury that he had no choice but to bring speedy in. Lloyd typical hijinks happen on the field, Speedy wins big matches, and more importantly, he wins the girl. 28. Jim Thorpe: All-American (1951)This single list makes just because Thorpe is one of the best athletes in the world this country has ever seen. Sadly, his story deserves better than this one in which actor Burt Lancaster is half Native American Thorpe. His relationship with Pop Warner is notoriously the running theme of the story, but too much of it feels more glossy, and native American stuff feels a bit politically incorrect. That is to see some old college football action-netting really on the gridiron, four field goal points, and five-point touchdowns!-but the film sticks to the traditional story of Thorpe's rise and fall athletes and his inability to cope with life off the field. 27. Horse Feathers (1932)Horse Feathers revolves around the big game between Huxley and Darwin college, some crooked gamblers, a college widow, and a fascinating new university president, but the plot is second to watching the Marx Brothers' endless entertaining antics. It's amazing how their fast-paced humor still holds up 80 years later. The actual football game only occupies the last 12 minutes of the film, but there are a ton of great moments: Harpo pauses for a hot for a long time, Chico and Harpo play cards in the huddle, and score winning goals through horses and carriages. 26. Jerry Maguire (1996)Tom Cruise made his first appearance on the list, playing the role of a noted sports agent who tries to rearrange his moral compass. He lost his job and all but one of his clients, but was the last girl. Today, Jerry McGuire is famous for adding a few too many slogans to the national vocabulary (including Show me the money! and You complete me), but a review reminds us that action on the field is surprisingly top. For the final big game, the footage is seamlessly blended with actual game footage from a Monday night football game between the Cowboys and Cardinals. 25. Leatherheads (2008) Leatherheads go way back to the 1920s, some time before authentic deals, TV contracts, and Super Bowls. George Clooney acts as captain of the Duluth Bulldogs, who are on the verge of collapse as they recruit a war hero and college football legend (John Krasinski) to join the team. The film tends to focus too much on Clooney and Krasinki's love of a crackerjack female reporter (Renee Zellweger) and the basic truth behind the war hero claims, but it's still interesting to see old football action in all its muddy, glorious early days. 24. Knute Rockne, All-American (1940)This 1940 film is famous for its iconic Win one for the Gipper speech, but don't forget the dressing room speech by legendary Notre Dame coach Knute Rockne (Pat O'Brien) arriving earlier in the film. (They are the foundation of every great half-time lecture in every next sports movie.) As for the Gipper, he is played by a young Ronald Reagan and is only in a small part of the film, but All-American crackles when he and O'Brien are together, thanks to their mouse-a-tat-tat banter. The film plays a little too fast and loose with history, scoring Rockne with the invention of both the front pass and the attack-two shift he may have completed but was used at the time. But the action of football is indisputably great, as most of it comes from the actual newsreel scene of Fighting Irish. 23. The Longest Yard (2005)Adam Sandler Sandler's first appearance this list features him playing paul crewe famously by Burt Reynolds in the original 1974. (Reynolds returned as the grizzled coach of the prison team here.) This re-amps up everything with its hard-hitting, flash-cutting, music-pumping style. It was a bit disappointing for the big fans of the original, but we couldn't resist Tracy Morgan leading the Texas State Prison cheerleaders. 22. Heaven Can Wait (1978)Sure, this Warren Beatty movie is more of a fantasy-romcom than a sports flick, but it stars a football team in Los Angeles! Remember when L.A. played football? Beatty plays quarterback Joe Pendleton, who is ready to lead the Los Angeles Rams to the Super Bowl. The only problem: He died before the big game. The rest of the film follows Pendleton's ascetic ass, followed by his swift return to Earth in the body of a millionaire buying team and trying to start at QB. As we said: fantasy. 21. Paper Lion (1968)Paper Lion is based on the true story of writer George Plimpton, who wanted to write a feature for Sports Illustrated about what it really like to play professional football. A pre-MASH Alan Alda was superb as plimpton was poorly prepared, who persuaded the Detroit Lions to let him go to training camp and try for a QB-slot without telling the other guys on the field he wasn't a real player. It's undeniably great for guys like us who stare at their TV screens all Sunday long thinking, I bet I can do it. 20. The Replacements (2000)Remember the 1987 NFL player strike, when teams used substitute players to fill out their lists and keep the season alive? It was around the 24-day period of failed Labour negotiations that both sides would probably rather forget was the basis of Sunday Reeves' hit. Reeves plays Shane Falco, a prominent college-turned-NFL washout who must lead his band's ragtag scales to victory. With just one more game to go into the playoffs, the original midfielder overcame the defence and took Falco's place. But all of a sudden!-what the team really needs is Falco's heart. He returns just in time to win the game and win the girl. 19. Wildcats (1986)Wildcats is a completely un realistic, albeit entertaining film about a woman who dreams of following in her father's footsteps as a football coach. Goldie Hawn plays the girls' track coach at a fancy school, who finally gets his shot at gridiron glory in troubled downtown, with the team needed full of underachievers. The film reeks of the 80s, but it has a few things going for it, including Woody Harrelson and Wesley Snipes as two of the High Middle Wildcats in their debut films. And maybe we're just high on nostalgia, but L.L. Cool J rap football runs on the The open use and super bowl shuffle spoof ending movie are both pretty amazing. 18. Everybody's All-American (1988)Based on a book by sportswriting legend Frank Deford, this sweeping story follows 25 years of Gavin Grey's life and career. Films up with Grey (Dennis Quaid) as the big man on campus at LSU. He's a star footballer with nothing but a bright future ahead of him. Sadly, his game-winning Sugar Bowl play was the highlight of a career that gradually went awry as Grey's dim star. His NFL term, first with the Redskins and then with the Broncos, looked as punishing as it felt. Grey continues to live his past laurels and his last appearance at a later reunion of his former LSU team is heartbreaking, especially for any man who has ever felt his best days were behind them. Okay, so this is a little depressing. 17. All the Right Moves (1983)A teenage Tom Cruise stars as a high school defensive back who dreams of escaping his last Pennsylvania steel town and going to college. (Steel towns are definitely a popular trope in football flicks.) He sees football as his only escape, but there is one major obstacle he must overcome: his coach. Craig T. Nelson (coach!) channels the great Santini as Cruise's rival. Add in a pre-Back to the Future, super cute Leah Thompson and some pretty good action on the field, and you've got a decent little movie. 16. The Waterboy (1998)In his next for The Wedding Singer, Adam Sandler plays feared college linebacker Bobby Boucher. Sandler's childy Cajun voice is pretty damn grating after a while, but there are undeniable laughter in this comedy about a college team of dim-witted waterboys who have almost supernatural tackling skills. And no, the football scenes are not exactly realistic, but they are still hilarious, especially when Boucher pretends the entire offensive line is his 'hard momma'. Henry Winkler also shone as coach who took a chance on Bobby and eventually got revenge on his lifelong opponent. 15. Radio (2003) Radio is based on the true story of a mentally challenged young man and high school football coach be friends with him. Ed Harris was inspired as mentor/coach, but it was Cuba Gooding Jr. that stole the show like James Radio Kennedy. Yes, football is really second-class, but the relationship between Radio and Coach Jones is as inspiring as any movie on this list. When Radio can't go to a away game with the rest of the team, his solo re-appearance is as exciting as any real football player put into the movie. 14. We Are Marshall (2006)On November 14, 1970, nearly the entire Marshall College football team was killed in a horrific plane crash. Director McG tells the story of how the team, schools and towns tried to recover next year. It's an uplifting story, and Matthew McConaughey, the coach trying to rebuild the team Keep things light enough while moving the bleak story forward. Matthew Fox also excelled as an assistant coach who just lost being on that tragic flight by a simple twist of fate. But a fair warning: Prepare for waterworks here, too. 13. Brian's Song (1971)If you've never shed tears about this true story of Chicago Bears teammate Gale Sayers Sayers Brian Piccolo, you're not human. The players are competitors on the field, and the best friends off of it. Sayers, a running back to Kansas, was destined for the star in Chicago. For Piccolo . . . we'll leave it to the film's story teller at the beginning of the film: Ernest Hemingway once said, 'Every true story ends in death.' Yes, this is a true story. The relationship between the two players feels realistic without being too sentimental, and football scenes are top notch, thanks to real Bears game footage from the NFL Films archive. 12. Gridiron Gang (2006) Gridiron Gang may be just a corny movie about troubled teenagers and gang bangers in California who find redemption through football, but fortunately, it rises above cliches. Dwayne Johnson plays Sean Porter, an adviser at a juvenile detention center who uses football to teach children about respect for themselves and each other. In the final credits, you can watch clips from the 1993 documentary Gridiron Gang to see how close the script is to the true story. Many of Johnson's speeches were lifted from Porter's actual speeches. Hey Hollywood: Go ahead and re-release the original already. 11.Varsity Blues (1999)Say it to us now: I don't want your life! That's what a young James Van Der Beek like quarterback Jonny Moxon uttered to his father midway through the Varsity Blues, after finally securing starting positions on his Texas high school football team, only to second-guess his role and future in football. Jon Voight along for the ride as the win-at-all-cost coach of the school, who eventually, and rightfully, takes control of his team. There are a few moronic filler lots that are completely unnecessary, but this provides the goods. And if nothing else, Varsity Blues boasts Ali Larter's stunning debut film . . . In a whipped cream bikini, to boot. (Enjoy.) 10. Any Given Sunday (1999)Any Given Sunday is Oliver Stone's take on professional football as national religion. You've got Dennis Quaid as the aging champion (think Brett Favre); Jamie Foxx as a football prodigy who changed the game when he entered the field (think Cam Newton); Al Pacino chewed up the sidelines and scenery as a former coach (think Tom Landry mixed with, also Al Pacino); and Cameron Diaz is the new owner of the team (think Cameron Diaz). Many real-life stars of the pig skin past also appear, including Jim Brown and Lawrence Taylor. Although the film doesn't always add up to its total parts, Sunday still has more than enough gridiron action and talk inside football to satisfy any fan. 9. The Longest Yard (1974)Burt Reynolds brings his 70s Game A as Paul Crewe, a former professional quarterback who is Jail and be recruited to play for a high stakes game between prisoners and guards. In the big game, Crewe's consecutive individual penalties were worth it on the penalty spot, and his miraculous one-yard effort to end the game was fully deserved. Worth. all its grainy, slow-mo excitement. Means real machine. 8. The Blind Side (2009)You can tune this up for its football story, but you'll be just moved by the action off the field. Based on Michael Lewis's book of the same name, The Blind Side is the true story of the current Ravens attack that tackles Michael Oher's path from Tennessee's projects to Ole Miss (and finally the NFL) with the help of Memphis socialites Sean and Leigh Anne Tuohy. Watching Quinton Aaron's new people grow like Oher, from hulking behemoth silence to success, protecting family members is just as impressive as Oher's true journey. 7. Invincible (2006)Invincible is the true story (primarily) of Vince Papale, who won a place on coach Dick Vermeil's 1976 Philadelphia Eagles lineup. OK, so papale real life was actually playing professional football with the competitive world football league at the time, but enough aspects of his story ring were true enough to make this underdog story easy to root for. Think of Wahlberg as a more mature version of Rudy trying to break free of his relationships from the other end of Pennsylvania. It's also the story of legendary NFL coach Dick Vermeil and the faith he had in Papale unful examined. You don't have to like the Eagles to root for Papale and Vermeil to succeed in the big game of the movie. (Spoiler alert: They do.) 6.The Express (2008)This appreciation flick is based on the true story of running back Ernie Davis, the first African-American Heisman Trophy winner in NCAA history. Express may have some of the most realistic reproducing college actions on the entire list. Davis followed in the footsteps of predecessors Jackie Robinson and Jim Brown, with whom he succeeded as a defender at Syracuse, breaking down color barriers and standing stoic in the face of a dark period in the country's history. After his Heisman win, Davis joined Jim Brown in the Cleveland backfield, but the strike was tragic, and he made the cut in his prime before he could ever take a snap in the NFL. Instead, we're wondering what might have been. 5. North Dallas Forty (1979)Want a really gut-wrenchingly look at what could have happened behind the scenes in the NFL back in the 70s? Look no further than Mac Davis and Nick Nolte are two star players of the North Dallas Bulls, in this flick based on the great novel by former Dallas Cowboy Peter Gent of the same name. North Dallas Forty set up players as hard-partying wild men and coaches as stat-focused micro-managers. Nolte's ageing wide-body recorder is used as a good off-roader in a plan to get a younger player to do whatever it takes to win The film also features this prescient line, which will be called in sports negotiations for decades to come: Every time I call it a game, you call it a business. And every time I call it a business, you call it a game. 4. Unbeaten (2011) Unbeaten is a great post-season documentary by a high school team in Memphis, but Manassas Tigers are more than just any team. Would. Sitting on a string of losing seasons, and under the guardians of a volunteer coach from the other side of town, the inner-city kids must fight their way to the playoffs for the first time in the team's history. As much as any movie on this list, doc shows that football is about more than just the game itself. 3. Friday Night Lights (2004) Peter Berg's film still holds up as one of the best high school football films ever made. Based on H.G. Bissinger's 1990 book, it's a grim, realistic view of religion as high school football in small towns across Texas. It's as much about Billy Bob Thornton's Coach Gary Gaines as it is about the vulnerability of the young men on his team that face the enormous pressure of playing football while both making a name for themselves and trying to escape the shadows of past players. Berg turned this film based on a true story into an equally great drama that ran for five seasons. 2. Rudy (1993)Rudy is more than just a football movie. It's an underdog story. It's a family story. It's about following your dreams. Most importantly, it's a story about the heart. Daniel Rudy Ruettiger told him a lot of things: not smart enough to get into Notre Dame, not big enough to play football for schools, not being able to get rid of the steel mills his family worked in, and not good enough for the fiancée that left him. But in the face of ridiculously long odds, Rudy (Sean Astin) clears every hurdle and is eventually dressed in blue and gold. Sure, the closing scene of him firing QB to Georgia Tech is an explosive ending, but it's the scene in which every one of his teammates surrenders his jersey on game day so Rudy can play that will leave you in a pile of man tears. (Don't worry, we know it's just dust in your eyes.) 1. Remember the Titans (2000) Titans earned top positions on our list because it has just about everything you could ever want in a great sports movie: action, heart, laughter, tragedy, victory, and a message of racial harmony. Based on a true story and set in 1971, it's about two schools in Virginia that are integrated into one, forcing players of all races to play together for the first time. In addition to the alleged political situation, the Titans' white coach was asked to resign and allow an African-American coach to lead the team. It has a phenomenal cast that includes Denzel Washington and Bill Yoast, and feels real in both football action and racially charged scenes set in the early 70s South. But if you don't want to get caught tearing in front of your buds, make sure you watch this alone. Left! Strong side!
